

MORNINGSIDE COLLEGE

Campus visits are a great way to find the right college.

You can peruse Web sites. You can look through brochures. But the best way to figure out whether you like a particular college is to schedule a campus visit.

- During the visit, ask about what matters most to you: the student-faculty ratio, residence life options, co-curricular programs, technology available or opportunities in the surrounding community.
- To get a true comparison, schedule each visit on a weekday and interact with current students.
- Call at least a week ahead of time so the admissions office can schedule meetings with faculty and staff members in your interest areas.
- Make plans to talk with someone about financial aid options, tour the campus.
- Visit more than once.

"Visit campuses more than once before finally deciding which school to attend. You want to get more personal with your advisor, your professors, some of the athletic or music people, just to get a feel for what those people are going to be like."

Jordan Mouw

"You get a feel for the campus really well - what the classrooms are like, what the administration and professors are like. You just get a feel for what everything's like and if you'll fit in or if you'll like it."

Nicole Guericke
